Valuing Labor

For most of the world, tomorrow, May 1st, is Labor Day. Valuing the work that each person does is fundamental to maintaining a harmonious community.

At the Snider Campus, we are fortunate to have a group of people dedicated to acknowledging and organizing everyone who tends to the residents: the Human Resources Department. Getting the right people to care for all who live here, and inspiring them to give their best, is particularly difficult in these anxious times. Judaism recognizes the importance of management and the critical need to treat everyone fairly in business, whether they are managers, professionals, front line staff, full time or part time. It is part of showing respect for each person, remembering that regardless of our task, we are all created in the image of G-d.
